

Burndown Chart

33 points done, 14 points to go

In order to keep the sprint in schedule, we stayed in constant communication with each other. We discussed problems and what we had completed daily, along with going into greater detail during our sprint meetings. For the user stories we were unable to finish, you can see an uptick in remaining work near the end of the sprint. This was when we realized that it was likely we wouldn't be able to complete all the work we had hoped to. This was a result of us overestimating how much work we would be able to complete with the time that we had.